

Jordan Syring

Dr. Nadarajah

AWR 201

Process Work 1

1. The central question Wilkerson is responding to is, is it the teacher's job to love the kids, is it okay to just do our job. Responding to her principle "I want you to love your work and love the kids.' Why do I need to do anything other than what I am contractually obligated to do." I would say that she does a very good job of explaining her position and gives very good examples. One thing I would say though is she leaves out in my opinion the biggest contributor to her discussion that is age. She is an elementary school teacher the overall opinion is if you teach young kids, you must love the kids and your job. This stigma decreases as the students increase in age she does not talk about this, for example where she says "My doctor doesn't love me, nor do my dentist or my therapist" of course you're a grown person, but when you're a kid that stigma changes.

2. She address the problem that teachers must go above and beyond their job description to be considered good teachers. Where teachers are pressured into unpaid hours, emotional overextension, broken person life. Where she says this is except for teachers if you love the kids. She address a topic that has such stigma that it is not talked about. By writing this she is opening a discussion where it allows other teachers to think about it and share their opinions.

3.

College:

- Development of Drug Abuse
- Peer pressure related to drugs

Social Media/Pop Culture:

- Glamorization of Drug Abuse
- How social media starts or influences addiction

Sports:

- Drug use in sports
- CTE

Workforce/Labor:

- Drugs in the workplace
- AI